SYNOPSIS

Dr. Rebecca Gomperts sails a ship around the world, providing abortions at sea for women with no legal alternative. Her idea begins as flawed spectacle, faced with governmental, religious, and military blockade.

But with each roadblock comes a more refined mission, until Rebecca realizes she can use new technologies to bypass law – and train women to give themselves abortions using WHO-researched protocols with pills.

From there we witness her create an underground network of emboldened, informed activists who trust women to handle abortion themselves. Vessel is Rebecca's story: one of a woman who hears and answers a calling, and transforms a wildly improbable idea into a global movement.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

Rebecca's story first drew me in because of the metaphor I found to be inherent to her work: a woman seeking a space outside of sovereignty in order to reclaim her own. The metaphor manifests on the ship, with practical, tangible consequences that empower others and change the course of lives. In that way, Rebecca's approach to activism inspires; Vessel aims to do the same.

Over the process of making this film, I have learned a new perspective on why women need safe access to abortion, and respect for the dedication of those working to help secure this. Of the 42 million abortions that women have every year, approximately half happen in illegal settings. Statistically, these laws have no control over whether or not abortions happen; the only thing they can control is whether or not they happen safely. Every ten minutes, somewhere in the world, a woman dies due to complications from unsafe abortion. This is about a plane crash a day.

There have always been networks of women, of mothers, sisters, healers, and whispered information that help women access alternatives to violent ways of ending unwanted pregnancies. The abortion pill - available in most of the world - is the modern "women's knowledge" for those living under restrictive abortion law. Networks of activists are aware of its existence, but not always clear on the protocols. Vessel contextualizes the pill: introducing it to a wider audience.

The film shows women working primarily in countries without the protection of Roe v. Wade, but is a cautionary tale in this respect. As anti-choice efforts increase, women in the United States, my home, are increasingly looking to women's networks for help. Vessel will help bring this issue out into the open, furthering the understanding that laws cannot prevent abortion; they can only make abortion less safe; and when empowered with information and the strength of a network, women reclaim this right, on their own terms.

Since I began, my reasons for making the film have evolved. It was impossible for me to witness this work without internalizing how desperately alone women and abortion providers feel in illegal settings. The Women on Waves campaigns make them feel connected, and less scared. Vessel's goal is to offer that same solidarity, to share the view I've had of a movement emerging from the underground, and invite audiences to join.

PRODUCTION NOTES

When I first learned about Women on Waves, it was like a light switch went on – I knew it would be a powerful story. I had a background working with cameras and production design, but the first interview on film I ever conducted, with Associate Producer Anita Shillhorn van Veen, was with Rebecca on the day we met.

Several filmmakers had documented Rebecca's earlier work, including American producer Hilary Heath and Portuguese filmmakers Dina Campos Lopes and Racquel Freiere, who kindly donated their unused footage. My editor, Simeon Hutter, and I thus had the challenge of piecing together from their footage what had happened on early ship campaigns. We turned to Emily Hubley for animations to convey complex legal and medical information intrinsic to the story. T. Griffin and Heather McIntosh produced an original score with the cello at its center.

Over 150 individual donors and friends came together to get the project off the ground, and were joined by 13 foundations who supported the film. Executive Producer Abigail Disney and Co-Producer Elissa Brown were brave early allies of the film, taking a risk on a first time filmmaker and a controversial subject. When Chicken and Egg Pictures, and Dan Cogan, GERALYN Dreyfous and Jenny Raskin of Impact Partners came on board, we knew we had the potential for great reach. The film then partnered with Cinephil for international sales, Film-Buff for North American sales, and Film Sprout for outreach and audience engagement.

After a standing ovation at our World Premiere at SXSW, Vessel took home a Special Jury Recognition for Political Courage and the SXSW Audience Award for Documentary Competition. Vessel was honored with the Peter Wintonick Award at Sheffield DocFest, the Adrienne Shelly Excellence in Film-making Award at Nantucket Film Festival, and an Honorable Mention for the Moving Mountains Award at Mountainfilm in Telluride. The film continues on the festival circuit and plans for release at the end of 2014.

Rebecca, now a friend and mentor, lives by her creed, to Trust Women, and she has entrusted us with her story. It's been seven years since that first interview, a long and thrilling learning experience with one of the bravest groups of people I know, a global network of people devoting their lives, at great risk, to helping women and families.

ABOUT WOMEN ON WAVES

Women on Waves was founded in 2000 with the aim to prevent unwanted pregnancies and unsafe abortions by providing sexual health services, including early medical abortions (abortion with pills), on board a Dutch ship, outside the territorial waters of countries where abortion is illegal.

In the last 10 years Women on Waves has generated enormous public interest, and much controversy, with ship campaigns in Ireland, Poland, Portugal, Spain, and Morocco. The ship campaigns are conducted by invitation and in collaboration with local partner organizations, and are designed to add momentum to activist efforts already on the ground working to liberalize law.

Although legalization of abortion is important, medical abortion now gives women the possibility to take their lives into their own hands, regardless of the legality of abortion or the willingness of doctors. Ensuring that WHO-researched information about medical abortion is easily available to women can save women's lives. Therefore, Women on Waves now focuses on helping women access information about medical abortion by distributing information through the internet, grassroots efforts on the ground, and by supporting the creation of safe abortion telephone hotlines in collaboration with partner organizations across South America, Africa, Asia, and Europe.

ABOUT REBECCA GOMPERTS

Rebecca Gomperts, founder and director of Women on Waves, studied medicine and visual arts in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. After graduating Gomperts became an abortion doctor and sailed as a ship's doctor with the environmental activist Greenpeace ship, the Rainbow Warrior. While sailing in South America, she was first exposed to women who suffered greatly due to lack of access to reproductive health services and safe, legal abortions. These women and their stories inspired Rebecca to start Women on Waves.

She has won numerous awards for her work with Women on Waves, including the "Allan Rosenfield Award for Lifetime Contributions to International Family Planning" by the Society of Family Planning (2012), the "Global Women's Rights Award" from the Feminist Majority Foundation (2007), the "Rosie Jimenez Award from the Women's Medical Fund" (2005), and Planned Parenthood's "Margaret Sanger Woman of Valor Award" (2004) and "Women Making History Award" (2002). She was named one of Women Deliver's "Top 100 most inspiring people delivering for girls and women" (2011), one of the "1000 Peace Women for the Nobel Prize" (2005) and "Woman of the Year" by Ms. Magazine (2001).

OUTREACH AND ENGAGEMENT

Vessel has partnered with Film Sprout to launch on an international tour of screenings intended to provide a forum for further debate, discussion and education about the global challenges facing reproductive healthcare. Any group can host one!

Nonprofits, student groups, activists and educators can host a local screening. You contribute a modest screening fee and, in return, we give you:

- The Vessel DVD
- the Public Performance Rights for Vessel
- Action and Discussion Materials
- Digital Promotional Tools
- Hands-on support from our community screenings team

Interested parties may visit our website for a brief request form to indicate interest, or email vessel@filmsprout.org.
